After proceeding about haif a mlie we drew rein and dismounted to remove the bags from our horses' hoofs and to give the nags a breather. This halt was necessary, for we had 16 miles farther to go before we could reach Cawnpore, and the odds were we would have to make another dash for it through Onoa, a village about eight miles off. It was jucky for us in more ways than one that we did deelde on this halt, as withiu a quarter of an hour we heard the enemy's cavairy coming down the road, evidently following us up. Of the road we went, and hid hehind some high bushes, relying for safety on the darkness of the night and on the hursen not neighing. NOTES AND CUMMENTS. The death of Saul and the assumpt of the crown by David appeared to the Philistines a good time to renew their ancient warfare against Israel. So they made an incursion into the valley Rephalm, entirely overrunning it. In themanner of conducting this war we can note one great difference in the characters of the new king and of the old one. Saul. David inquired of the Lord whether or not he should go up against the Philistines. Saul, too, on his campaigns and done so, but the story shows his inmiry to have been purely formel playld's character, as all his history shows, was thoroughly religious. That is not saying he was all that we might hirk he ought to have been, but his eyes and heart were certainly turned Godward. Sin ta never to be excused, the sins of liavid are not to he, but there is a radical difference between the man who alies to do right and the man who does not care whether he does right or wrong, so long as he accomplishes his ends. That wavld was sincere we can nions of both his oflowers and of some of his opponents Is shown when the battle is over as he declarer: "The Lord bath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters." He thereupon called the place of victory Banl-parazim, which means a breach of waters. After one more great battle there came peace.
